

The Cuban Missile Crisis

Ethan McIntosh, Henry Kneller, and Cobe Crawford

Senior Division

Group Document

Paper Length: 398

Process Paper

Cuban Missile Crisis

Our topic was chosen while we were browsing through all of the topics to choose from, we found the Berlin Wall. After doing some research, we came to the conclusion that we didn't want to continue doing this topic. So instead, we chose to do the Cuban Missile Crisis. We chose this topic because we thought that it would be a lot easier and more interesting since we didn't know much about the topic. This fits into the theme because there was a debate between the United States and the Soviet Union.

We conducted our research by looking up specific events during the and before the crisis. An example of this is the Bay of Pigs Invasion. We looked up the event in google and went to sites like History.com and National Archives. We found information from these websites and then used the information in whatever paragraph we needed.

The way that we made this project was by taking our papers that we already composed and putting them in the different sections of the website. We took the sections that we already had put them as their own sections in the website. We took what we had in those sections for our paper, chopped them up, and put the information on the website. We also tried to add 1-4 pictures for each section of the website.

We think that the Cuban Missile Crisis was one of the most important events that occurred during the Cold War. We think this because it could've led to the destruction of the world if it wasn't handled the way that it was. It also led to a better relationship between the U.S. and the Soviet Union. With the strengthening of the relationship between the U.S. and the Soviet Union it leads to future conflicts being less likely.

Our topic is significant in history because it prevented a war that would've killed hundreds of millions of people. The Cuban Missile Crisis was the climax of the Cold War because it was the closest point that we have ever been to nuclear war and that nuclear war could've led to the destruction of our planet. This event had a positive outcome in the end due to the fact that there wasn't any conflict.

Process Paper

Cuban Missile Crisis